"Intending travellers to Persia are hereby warned that they should strictly observe the Exchange Control Act of that Country. British subjects on arrival in Persia are required to declare the amount of India or other currency in their possession and this is entered in their travel documents. This money can only be exchanged into local Persian Currency at authorised Banks at controlled rates fixed by the Persian Government. Sale of foreign currency in the black market or to unauthorised persons is an offence under Persian Law and is punishable with fine of upto twice the amount of exchange sold. Offenders are also liable to detention at the frontier for investigation.

With effect from 5th December 1945, the import and export of Persian currency notes from Persia is strictly prohibited. Travellers may however carry with them an amount not exceeding 1,000 Rials when entering or leaving the Country. Any sums in excess of this will be confiscated as contraband and proceedings will be taken against those concerned. In order to avoid trouble, travellers are advised in their own interest to observe the Act strictly."
